Jeff:

Here is the EPA site which discusses Spill Prevention Control and Countermeasure Plans (SPCC) and Facility Response Plans (FRPs). The SPCC plan has changed as you will see when you see the site. A word of caution is that the one plan cross reference sheet has not changed with the change in the SPCC requirements. I don't think it will be a significant issue. Since you are required to have an SPCC/FRP before you begin operations, you do not get the luxury of the extension of time to comply with the new regulations. You must be in compliance now. You need to get hopping on this because I am putting your facility on the inspection schedule. It should not be a big deal but you need to make sure your plans cover the requirements in the SPCC and FRP (if applicable).
